This fellow had gone by then. So I basically learned, myself, after that--from that point on. (Was the priesthood still anywhere in your mind?) It was when I went there, when I first went there. But I really didn't--I got turned off on the priesthood. I probably would have thought more about it had I not gone there. Because there were a lot of things I saw there that I didn't agree with, and I would fight it, you know what I mean? So I got in trouble a few times. Just arguing, and whatever. Fighting the system, sort of thing. Halfway through Grade 11--the second time up there--they asked me not to come back, because I'd gotten into a physical fight with a--they said I could, but they'd rather if I didn't. That's a long story.... And then I ended up in Thompson High School, which was a non-religious school in North Sydney. And this is where I started to get my first band together. We had a basement band. It was all it was-- we never got out of the basement. It was another basement band--actually an offshoot of that one--and we played one show one time, and I think there were 7 or 8 people there, counting the band--so I kind of figured we needed some more work. But there was one person there (Jimmy Hiscock) who I knew he knew I sang. So he came to see me, and he had a band and it was called the Rocking Saintrrs. So I started hanging around with them and eventually started getting up to play with them--you know, "Here's a spe? cial guest, a young guy"--you know, do a couple of songs. I eventually joined the band as an organ player/singer. That was probably 1965, I guess. From there, I played with that band for a couple of years, when I was playing Junior A hockey, and I was an electrician at the same time, and I was burning the candle at both ends and in the middle. By this time we were playing things like, you know, "96 Tears" by Question Mark and the Mysterians--things like that. But at this time Jimmy Hiscock, who was the singer for the Rocking Saints, was doing all pop stuff. He would be doing Roy Orbison--that was his claim to fame, his Roy Orbison im? personations, sort of. And he would do the hit songs, like the Number One, whatever it was. If it was 1910 Fruit Gum Company, he would be doing it. But I on the other hand was searching the blues and finding out where Elvis was getting his songs, and dis? covering the earlier guys, you know. (Can you name some of them?) Well, actual? ly, when I got into that--you mentioned the
