Strathlorne Forest Nursery... 10 million trees a year by 1984. The official opening of the Department of Lands and Forests' Strathlorne Forest Nursery last August marks a major achievement in Nova Scotia's drive toward a healthy, well-managed forest that is less susceptible to insect attack. When in full production, this multi-million dollar 172-hectare (425-acre) facility near Inverness will employ 120 part-time workers besides full-time staff, and turn out 10 million seedlings a year. By 1984, with planned increases from other government nurseries and from a greatly increased production by private industry, there will be 28 million young trees a year available for the ongoing replenishment of Nova Scotia's most valuable renewable resource ...and for the protection of 24,000 forest-related jobs province-wide.
