about working with civilians, who complained about everything. With the soldiers, mountains were made into molehills. They were exceptional. They hold a very, very high spot in my treasury of memories. (Did you ever wish you were home?) No! No, you never wished you were home. You were so glad to be there. Nobody wanted to be home. You felt that you were very fortunate to have a little, a very little share, a tiny share in winning the war. (I've seen many pictures that showed patients in the wards of the hospitals. And they'd pose with the nurses. It seemed like the nurses and these patients were very good friends.) Yes, they were. Very good friends. (Do you suppose a lot of marriages came out of that?) Oh, they might have. There might have been some, I don't know. There was nothing of that sort. No, it's just a little hard to give the picture. It's just, there was wonderful fellowship, and no maudlin pity or anything of that sort. When I look back on it now, it seems to have been an amazing atmosphere of comradeship--I think you could use that word. And sometimes when I think of the present-day situation, I think it was remarkable at what a high level their contacts were carried on. I have nothing but happy memories of my years in the service, nothing but happy memories. The hospitals were bright and cheerful places, really, as I knew them. They really were, they were wonderful.
