else, I could do that elsewhere. But I'd just as soon stay here and run the show myself and make the decisions on how things are going to work. But the business community in Sydney was tremendous, absolutely tremendous. They just rallied behind me. Charlotte Street just overwhelmed me. It was just like a tidal wave. Every little shop along there seemed to come out and support me. Little businesses like the little optical shop. Not all big ones. The clothing shops. The (private) radio station. And talking to the CBC-Radio (CBI) staff--Glen Bilawey told me they were following the whole progress from the very start, gradually, from nothing right to the point of really fulfilling my objective of getting all the shareholders. And he said when the day arrived that I finally sold my final share, to get that hundred thousand dollars--and I found out that I could actually match that hundred thousand dollars with interest-free money through the Nova Scotia Venture Corporation--he said in the Halifax bureau of the CBC, everybody toasted. This is, I guess, the "Information Morning" crew in Halifax--they'd all been posted by Joella and Glen on the status--and there was a big "Hooray!" in the studio over this whole thing. They felt that they were instrumental as well in helping an industry get off the ground, to start an industry. And they were. So the whole thing was exciting, you know. Obviously it was not just myself, but a lot of other people were very excited about it and the way it happened.
