To give an example of scordatura fiddling, and to at the same time give a sense of the ideas a number of fiddlers have brought to a single tune, Paul Cranford has notated two versions of "Christy Campbell." "Christy Campbell" appears in TRADITIONAL CELTIC FIDDLE MUSIC OF CAPE BRETON • and it's there in standard notation. Paul's first version is very similar to the one given in the book, except that it's in scordatura notation, with a couple of extra cuts. This system of notation is very simple to use. The fiddler simply retunes his fiddle as indicated before the key signature and finishes as if in standard notation. It's based on the Dunlay/Reich setting; theirs is based on Carl MacKenzie's playing, and Carl MacKenzie, I suspect, learned it from a tape of Angus Chisholm."
