the track a couple of times, tripping and falling and running into a couple of fences, and cut himself up pretty bad, and hurt himself. That's why he didn't race as 3, You couldn't keep on training him. His chest was split open, and he had stitches in there and a tube to drain the fluid out-- he was cut up pretty bad, I got him castrated. When the stitches came out, I sent him home, and he was turned out for the summer. Then when I came back in the fall, I picked him up again and I started training him again. It was probably October or November before I started, and then he raced in--I don't know--February. Each race he was going, he' was getting in? to tougher competition and tougher competition. What, really, I liked the most about it was: the first race you went in, say 2.17, and then you dropped right the next race to 2.11, Which is 6 seconds--that's a big drop for any horse. Different competition, and the time was a drastic change, (Then by the third race--was it again stiffer competition?) Each time he raced the competition got stiffer and stiffer, (What happened at the third race?) Oh, he won it easy. Like he's won all of them easy. quicken up considerably to catch them. (Where were you at the half mile?) Last--' Eighth, so to speak. . (So you have half a mile to go. You're the last horse. What did you do?) I took him to the outside. And a horse came in front of me, which would make the ideal situation--second over, with cover in front of me. And I said, "This is terrific." But the horse that came in front of me wasn't closing any. The lead horse was really pouring it on and opening up, I said, "Geez, I'm never going to catch him, I can't be sitting here waiting--I'll have to go 3 wide," So I moved him 3 wide, and then he started to close ground. And he just won that race in the final strides. But when you consider the distance he covered, it was kind of an incredible race for him to go. That would be his 5th race. The race only went in 2.10, But the lead horses were over the half in 1.08, and the last half was 1.02. That was for the ones in the lead. But now, I'm last. So my half is probably 1.09 and a piece, because seconds are ticking by by the time I get to the half. They say they had his official last half clocked up in the judges' stand in a minute and 4/5 of a second. Which, when you consider it's still March and you're still in Cape Breton--that's quite a burst of speed, really. One race there--the only time that I < him to go, that he didn't by himself-- one particular race where maybe I was confident or--just the way a race goes sometimes, I ended up sitting at the back of the pack-- really leisurely first half, like really slow. And then the pace quickened up. So when you're back further, your pace has got to
