for an hour while they were waiting to get a machine fixed. They had to have spares to keep you going. The machines broke down quite a bit. (What did you wear on your head?) Nothing. (Despite all the grease.) You washed your hair a lot. Some girls wore a bandana on their head. But I never did. (Were there any rules at all about clothing or appearance?) Yeah. You had to be clean- looking. Like, we did have a lot of girls in there that were maggoty-looking--you know, I mean--not from the dirt there. You know what I mean? You could tell, they just never washed--their hair was greasy all the time. Of course, let's face it, we wouldn't want to work with those people. You know, we didn't know if they had lice in their head or--you know. (It was as bad as that?) Oh, yeah. If you put 1200 women in a place, you've got to get a few of every type. So we used to put in a complaint, and that girl would be taken into the office and told to clean up her act. (Oh, it was as bad as that.) Oh, yes. There were quite a few. But once they were called in the of? fice, usually there wasn't too much problem with it. .
