Officers who used to come to the Carpenters Hall and they'd say to Beattie, "Do you know this song?" And Beattie would. And they'd sing. And some of them were lovely singers, those officers off of the ship. She could entertain them, anyway. (Did you yourself grow up with music in your home?) No, but my mother was always singing. She wasn't a bad singer, either, my mother. Hymns, or anything that was going. But my father and his brother, they came from Ireland--the north of Ireland. And they had medals--I don't know what my mother ever did with them. But they could stepdance. They could play the piano. And they could sing anything. That helps them get over the initial financial hardships, but it is not a lasting solution. Becoming re-employed is. What these workers 902 5646451 (But you yourself, now, what instruments did you play, coming up?) Just the piano and a mouth organ. (When did you start the mouth organ?) Oh, well, you know, when I was a little kid, I loved it. We used to go to the 15C store and get them for 15C. If I got ahold of 15C I'd always get the mouth organ, in a funny little box that you couldn't keep it very long, it was all gone to pieces. (Did Beattie have a long career?) Oh my goodness, yes, since she was about 8 years old, she started to play the piano. We were in the house that they tore down--the old homestead. I lived over there 9 years with my in-law people. One time, we were engaged at two dances. J
