(Now, I hear stories about getting together in the evenings, singing, making music. I don't see where you'd have the strength.) Oh, we did. He knows. We used to--Winston Fitzgerald--and Bob Fitzgerald used to play the accordion. And the Newfoundland boats'd come in. They'd be anchored in at the wharf at White Point. And we'd all go down to the wharf, a bunch of us girls. John; Big dance on the end of the pier. Sadie: And we'd have a dance out on the end of the wharf. After we did that we'd all--a bunch of them would walk down " " wouldn't be expanding into the US. if ACOA, wasn't working for us." "We've come a long way since we started up in 1984, determined to produce the Cadillac of plywood foundation forms. Today when a Maritime contractor pours the concrete for a new building, nine times out of ten he's using one of ours. But we still needed help when it came time to penetrate the U.S. market. That's why we're grateful to ACOA. Heather and Donald McLeod Proprietors, Superior Forming Systems and Supplies Ltd. 'Thanks to ACOA, we've moving into a bigger building and equipping it with the latest machinery. The increased productivity and efficiency will give us the edge we need to succeed in the States. And the ACOA people were just fantastic, very helpful and receptive to new ideas. So when anyone asks about ACOA, we tell them we know it's working for us." ACOA It's working. For all of us. Well, then it was bedtime. Nine o'clock was bedtime. Then you went home and to bed. (And got your 4 or 5 hours!) (It was a remarkable way of life.) It was beautiful. I'd go all through it again today, if I had to. Every bit of it. We were happy, and we were all together. (I see. Quite wonderful. You're not angry about it then, about all the work that you did.) No. No, my dear, I never regretted a minute of it. No. (But you can't blame her father for not wanting to give up good help like that, can you?) John: No. No, that's true. Sadie: No, we never looked down on him, because he was alone. And he worked hard. John: White Point, down there where they used to fish--there was Tom Williams, and (a) Theriault, and Joe Asseff-- three merchants. And all of them buying fish. Their flakes were all over White Point. White Point was flakes everywhere. And the fish was split on the stage and carried up to put on the flakes and dried. There'd be fagots, big piles of fish in the fall--all piled up, dried. Merchants would do good on that. 'Cause the fisherman wasn't getting any thing. Joe Asseff was a great merchant.... Sadie: And there were three factories. There was Neville's factory. He was the first man that had the factory. And then Tom Williams had a factory, and Joe Asseff had a factory, a lobster factory. John: And Theriault had a factory. Sadie: I don't remember him. Joe Asseff and Neville and Tom Williams. (And the pay--when you worked in the factory, what were you paid?) I were paid $20 a month We 109
