Big brook--that's the big brook that goes through the city and causes all the trouble. The Wash Brook, they call it. You've heard of it, probably. Go down by the City Hospital. Well, that runs from all the way in back there. Several lakes, and big barrens. Anyway. By gracious, we went about 200 feet in towards the brook and we heard this crashing. We were talking, of course, and she heard our voices, and out she come. And of course, we were on a bit of a path, and we jumped and sidestepped her, and she went by us. But she was looking. In the meantime, my brother Bill was home from Halifax. He went out that way, from another farm up the road there, on horseback. And he had a rifle. And when she got by us, she took off. We watched the direction. She was on the run, too. And her head going, looking, looking, looking, to see where we were. She was--looking for prey. So anyway, we hollered to him as hard as we could. Wind was favourable and he could get it in the wind direction. "She's heading your way! Watch her!" So--she came out. And he was sitting on horseback. Just in the edge of the alders. So she turned back and she saw the horse--this, I guess, attracted her. So he took a shot at her, and he hit her right on the edge of the horn. And of course, the concussion of the shot knocked her down. But she got up again. I didn't see this, but he did. Well, she got up and she crashed that barbed-wire fence and she followed up through the woods. Well, there was a bit of blood when we got there. There was a bit of blood came off of the pith of the horn--there wasn't anything. We went over--he showed us where he fired. When we got over, oh, just a little lick and spit of blood here, on a leaf, and a little on a fern. And then there'd be a long ways before. Well, we tracked her all afternoon. And couldn't get her. The further she went, the less blood was coming. It was only superficial, you know. Anyway. We went up, away up in the woods. And then it clouded over and it began to shower a little, just light.
