ferry) stopped at 12 o'clock. And we used to have to walk that frigging railroad bridge. And poor old Beattie used to go in her stocking feet, for to get across this railroad bridge. Of course, well, I'd have the amplifier, and Winston'd carry the guitar and the violin. And Beattie'd have something else. And that was a long bridge --that was a dangerous thing. And we'd get halfway across the bridge. And Winston and I'd have a few slugs. And we'd tell Beattie, by jumping, we'd believe we heard a train blowing way up around Boisdale or wherever the case may be. I said, "We'd better speed her up." Poor thing, she was going as fast as she could. But holy jumping, the scrambling that we used to do to get across that frigging bridge. That was awful, when you come to think of it. I must tell you another one about--we were playing Glenville. And I was driving. And we had got a bottle in Sydney, and we opened it and took one drink. And there was a Mountie, I don't know--he was a kind of an evil type of fellow. So he laid for us behind the hall in Judique, you know. So, we went through there pretty fast. But anyway, he came out and nailed us for speeding, and he found the bottle. I think we were the fastest thing that--the only other fast thing that went through Judique at that time would be Angus Beaton's horse! So, we weren't going that fast, but apparently he just wanted to nail us. So anyway, they caught us and that was it. And there was a magistrate in Port Hood--holy jumping, he must have been 80 years old. So he said, "I'll let you fellows go in and plead here, so you won't have to come back way up here for this trial business." So we went in. And I pleaded guilty to the driving. Of course, I was driving, it was Winston's car. And Winston pleaded guilty to having the open liquor. So this fellow--holy jumping, he could hardly get around the hall. And after, he put the bottle on the table. And we were just about ready to go out, and I said to the old magistrate, I said, "How about selling us back that bottle?" I said, "We'll need it," I said, "at Glenville tonight." The Mountie said, "For God's sakes, get out of here," he said, "he'll put more charges against you!" What an awful thing to do, ask the magistrate!... (Tell me more about the audiences and how they'd react to you.) Well, I don't think we ever had a bad audience in our life. (Oh, come on--how can that be true?) What I mean--for to not give us hands, you mean? (Yes.) Oh, lord, we always seemed to please everybody, for some reason or other. Oh, I suppose there'd be a few cranks who didn't like it. At the last of it, there used to be a lot of young people come up, wanting us to play rock-and-roll. And we said, "Oh, no, that's not our bag at all. We don't play that stuff." You know, things started to change. (Now, when you'd play, let's say, the Venetian Gardens....) Oh, beautiful place.
