they didn't accept. She was allowed in the United Church to take the pulpit and preach. But not in the Anglican Church. But, she carried on. But she said to herself, "I'm never going to do anything with alcoholism here. Alcoholism is some? thing that comes from the person themselves. It's not what I'm going to put on top of them. I can help them out once they get to that--when they're chin gets to there, and they're looking at me for help, and they really want it. Well, perhaps I can do something then. But other? wise, I'm not going to help them." It's like drug--I don't know, if you want to do it, I suppose you can do it, but you have to want to do it first. I don't know. Town House, Glace Bay • home of Citizens Service League And so she said, "There's lots of other things in Glace Bay. So give me another try at it." So she started with--well, everybody was having flea markets--every church was collecting clothing and giving it to the poor, and all the rest of it. And so she said, "Well, let's all get to? gether." So she got them all together, Protestant and Catholics and all the rest. And had a clothing depot. In which St. Anthony's would have it one week, and the Presbyterians would have it another, and the Anglicans at another. And so it was all worked out evenly, and everything got along very nicely. Then she called a meeting. (Clara chuck? les .) If you knew her--she had blue eyes--I've read in stories about the English blue eyes. Well, she had these piercing blue eyes, innocent as anything. You'd think you were looking at a baby's blue eyes. And I said, "Hilda Wright, that is the curse of you, are those innocent blue eyes. Because you get everyone believing, and inveigled into what you're doing." She laughed at that. Said, "Me? No...!" So, you know, she started then. "The chil? dren are not getting an equal share. ones that have good parents and books in the home, and that'll read to their chil? dren and do this--they sweep through school. The others, that there's not even a newspaper in their house--and nobody's paying any attention--don't even know their colours when they go to school. They don't know anything. So let's start nur? sery classes."
