plant. But that was just one little section. You go across the track, and you're right in there. (So this was a new place to you.) This was down in the main part of the plant. (You'd never been in there.) You couldn't get in there. They weren't allowing any kids, any boys, to go in there. Only ones that got in there were people who were employed in the plant and going to work. So there was no way you could get in there beforehand. Nobody got in the steel plant. They had watchmen on the gates. So it was inaccessible to people.

So I knew that I had to go in through the gate right by where the overpass is there--used to be a subway then. I knew I had to go in that gate. And when I went in that gate, I asked the watchman where this place I had to go to--department called the General Yard Department. But I was fortunate enough that while I was going into work-- there was a man who knew my father. And he was a foreman in the department where I was going. So fate always somehow managed-- "We're people you can talk to"

"I'm going there." And he took me down, through all the shortcuts. There's no way I would ever have found that place by my own. 'Cause the watchman was giving me the long way, which would be the most simple way, you see. But Robinson--he took me through the mills, here and there shortcuts--that's the most direct way. Up and down the ladder, in this building, open that door.... I went into a little office, there was a fellow sitting behind a chair. His name was Dan Burke. I gave him my card and he took it. And he took my number down--1057. The big building where all the fellows that were coming to work--a lot of new people were hired that day. And I sat with that group. There were others who had been working for some time, were there. Then finally he came out. And all of us fellows that were hired that day, he told us to go down to the Open Hearth Department. We didn't even know where the Open Hearth Department was. And it was dark--pitch dark. There was no great amount of streetlights on there, you had to feel your way and follow somebody who knew where they were going. This was at nighttime--11 o'clock. Went in the Open Hearth Department. And talk about being frightened--seeing these big furnaces, and flames shooting out all over-- and coming at you. And the noise of the overhead cranes, the charging cars, and people walking. You're scared to death! You had to walk between these furnaces in order to go where we were going. And the flames some? times would be shooting out from the gas. Anyway, we went in there--somebody guided us in. And we went into the back.
