new play by Festival on the Bay, created from Cape Breton's Maga? zine materials, premiered Summer 1992.) But perhaps his most notable public honour came in the fall of 1988 when he was invited to a ban? quet in Sydney by James St. Clair, president of the Nova Scotia High? land Village at Iona, to receive the first award for contributions to the Gaelic culture of Cape Breton by a person or organization not part of it. The plaque said it was for both Ca? plan and his magazine • one sign that Cape Bretoners have, as he had hoped from the beginning, come to consider it their own. In the university cafeteria, a mid? dle-aged student says, yes, she al? ways reads the magazine. "They pass it around at the steel plant, and my husband brings it home." But it surprised her when she was told who put it out. "I just assumed it was a Cape Bretoner back from away." Not that it matters, she adds; what does is that it exists and is doing what it is. In an island where people sing poig? nant songs about the pressures to leave and the desire to stay, Ca? plan's correspondence from his read? ers is a testament to the longing of have gone away, and the sense of place they have carried with them to the ends of the earth. At home and abroad. Cape Bretoners have a phrase that says it all: "Where do you belong?" After 19 years in his adopted land, Ronald Caplan knows.
