(Isn't that remarkable. She had raised, of course--how many children did she have in all?) Six. And I was the youngest. (Three girls.) And three boys. (Danny'd be the oldest.) Yeah. Kenny was next to Danny, and then Annie Mae. And then Eddie. And then Margaret, Yeah. But I remember--me being the youngest--the rest would go out, maybe. Say there was a milling frolic--and I remember this, especially. There were no children at milling frolics in those days--no little children, you know. It was sort of a grown-up affair. The children that were in the home where the milling frolic was being held, they were there. But you didn't go as a child to a milling frolic at night. So, the rest would go, and I'd be home with Christy, and my mother and father. My father didn't go to milling frolics that much, I don't think, 'Cause he didn't sing,... But anyhow, after the rest would leave for the milling, I'd get an old woolen jacket and I'd sit alongside of my mother, and I'd put a chair alongside of her chair, and we'd sing the Gaelic songs. Now she was, I think, singing, helping me with the chorus. And she'd have a lot of fun doing that with me, (And what would you be doing?) Singing the milling songs, and pretending we were having a milling frolic at home, you know. So I have good memories of her. But I still feel badly, that there wasn't more done for her. (You don't feel responsible.) Yes, I do. (At 7 years old you felt responsible?) Not 7. But I was grown up, and she was still an invalid. I can see things today that I would have done much differently, and would have made life more enjoyable for her. (Aren't you hard on yourself,) Yeah, but--that's how it is. (What do you feel you did instead? If I can put it that way.) Oh, it's the things I didn't do, that I should have, that would have made life more pleasant for her. It was bad enough, you know, in those days, to be an invalid. But, because--like Danny said, now, he wanted you to go back, so that--he even felt a bit of that--that he didn't speak enough about our mother when you interviewed him that time.

Nova Scotia 'I?' Department Of "'?W Health Because our father went overseas (during World War One),,, She was left with 5 children in a small cottage. Just where the hydro is now {Nova Scotia Power, up the Wreck Cove River)--and I don't know where they got this little bungalow or cottage. And she lived there with 5 children and he went overseas. And you know, it wasn't easy to be left with 5 children in those days, (When you say "a little bungalow," was it a house as big as we're in now?) No. No, I don't remember it. But no, according to what I've been told, I don't know if there was an upstairs in it or not,,, I Annie Mae tells about--now, I didn't I know that this happened until our I daughter (Mary) was down last fall and I she said to me--talking about her j (grandmother)--she's now at the age (where she wants to find out more about ??her grandfather and grandmother.
