Alfred P. MacKay Tells How the Two Bulls Went to Orangedale (Beatrice MacKay. Alfred's wife: Why don't you tell him the story about the time you had to take the bull to Orangedale.) Alfred: Oh, it wouldn't be very interesting. (Cape Breton's Magazine: Why don't you try me.) Alfred: Well, there's really two bulls in the story. The first fellow, he was on tether out there in the field. And I was oystering at that time of the year. But anyway, my fa? ther, he informed me that I would have to do something with the bull. That he was sick and tired of pulling him around on a tether, you know. And that Jack Munro (the butcher) would buy him, if I took him to Orangedale. So, okay. I said, "Tomorrow, I'll do it." So, I went.... It took all day. And there was a fellow up the road here, he was a young fellow. He was teaching school--we had a school here. And he went to the road with me and helped me get the rope on the bull. And then he went to the school. And of course, the] bull took off the first thing. At the tide gallop, out that wood road was there. He took | off. He went out. And he was the boss on the rope, you know. I couldn't hold him. He went that way till I got a turn (of the rope around) a tree, somewhere out there. And then he didn't want to come back. And he lay down, and he wouldn't get up. And I had to break off limbs and start a fire under his head, you know. (Really? You started a little fire under his head!)
