bake a little cake she threw into the fire. When she got up in the morning the bin was exactly as she had left it. She soon baked all the meal and she then told the fairies that she was finished. They paid her for her work and told her that they would take her home that evening after it got dark. They told her to ask for any favor that she would like to have from them. Jean gave the matter careful thought. Her father was well-to-do and the family lacked nothing. She therefore asked the fairies that all her children and their descendants would have remarkable physical strength. Her request was granted. That is why the Robinsons are so strong. True to their promise they brought her home that night. Her father stopped saying nasty things about the fairies. I asked grandmother if there was any danger that they would come and take me through the night. She told me of course not if I said my prayers. She added, "Say them with me" • and she began: "Ar n-Athair a tha air neamh, Gu naomhaichear d' ainm, Thigeadh do rioghachd. Deanar do thoil air talamh, Mar a nithear air neamh...." That was as far as I stayed awake. When I awoke day was breaking and I was hungry.

It means being completely true to what is inside of you. To what you know is right. It means doing what you feel you must do regardless of the immediate cost or sacrifice. It means making decisions for yourself and your family, and your entire life based on what is proper, not on what is expedient. It means at all time to be honourable and to behave decently • -' and given in a very practical sense it pays, for without integrity no person is complete and without it no book, no play, nothing written, nothing done by man has any real value.
