out. He had a flashlight and he looked all around the car, and he looked across the road, and he looked in the ditches and every place and he couldn't see a thing. And then he began to look--the car was pretty dusty--and he began to look see if there would be a mark in the dust but he couldn't find a thing. Well, fine, he came home, but it worried him all night. And he went back to Sydney the next day and when he got to Sydney-- now, I cannot give you the name of this fellow but I'm going to call him Angus MacDonald--Leo said to Donald after they greeted each other in the afternoon he said, "You heard what happened to Angus MacDonald last night." And Donald said, "No, what happened?" He said, "He was killed. Car killed him." "Where?" "At the turnoff to Englishtown ferry." "Yes • we can get it there • AND FAST!" But Leo noticed the look on Donald's face and he says, "No." "Well," Donald said, "what happened?" "Well," he said, "he was killed. He was dead on arri? val when they got him to the hospital." He said, "He walked out of one car and square into the path of another." And he says, "They all came back into Sydney with him." Well Donald thanked God because he knew that he wasn't the one. But the thing that was hitting him was: Why did I feel that thump? Why did I get that warning or prem? onition, if you wish to call it? And the result was that he could never be satisfied until he went to a psychic in To? ronto and explained to the psychic what had happened to him. Now, I don't know whether this is an explanation. This is Cape Bre? ton, this all happened in Cape Breton, ex? cept the part that the psychic played. The psychic told him, "In this world, or in our surroundings, there's a world about which we know nothing. There is a world existing out there that nobody knows about and it's from this spirit world that we get all these premonitions. Now," he said, "the on? ly way I can explain that is that somehow they were trying to warn you or trying to give a word out to the world that something was going to happen at that spot." Now, you may laugh at this or all of that, but if there wasn't a world of that kind, why are they making a study in five of the largest universities in the world? Each one has a chair, each one has a department of psychic studies and they expect to come out with a report.
