bia University and it's his brother who told me. Now, if some of the largest universities in the world are making this study of psychic study and the spirit world, there must be something in it or they wouldn't be.... You wouldn't see so many intelligent people carefully studying these things. I was asked different times about this. I was asked by some people a lot more intelligent than I was about this, Why did I believe? I can't find it in my heart to deny. I'm not saying that I have any terrific personal experiences, but if you depend on and listen to the truth of people who are really intelligent and they have gone through experiences like that, you just can't help but believe. Now, there are many, many other intelligent stances of people. We had a bus driver at Margaree--this is not Cape Breton folklore, this is just--it's part of it. We had a bus driver at Margaree Forks and I will not give you his name but I think when I told you that he was called "The Friendly Giant" you'll know who I mean. I know probably your mother would anyway. He was a big, big man and he was very gentle and very kind. Only you didn't cross him because he could be kind of cantankerous if he got angry. But he was telling me a story: When he was 19 he was getting ready for a dance one night and the dance was at Southwest Margaree. But he didn't have to come down to the highway to get to the dance. There's a ridge of hills at Southwest Margaree and he could cross the hill to this place. It was probably, by walking across the hill, it would be a mile, a mile-and-a-half. And the idea was that he was working all day and then dressed up and started across the hill and it was dusk. He found himself walking alongside of another man, but how the man had got up to him he didn't know. Two of Cape Breton's finest storytellers: Archie Neil Chisholm and Joe Neil MacNeil And he was a little bit scared, a little bit leery, but finally he decided to look who in the devil this fellow was and he looked and it was a man who had committed suicide about a month prior to that. He spoke to him, he got terrified but he spoke to the man and he asked him, "I thought you were dead." And he said, "I am, but I took my life before my time. And until my time comes that I would normally die, my spirit will roam these hills." There are many types of forerunners. Your Take A Vacation From High Rates.
