bird made two turns around her head and flew out again. And she told us, she said, "We're going to get bad news." So in the afternoon she saw the parish priest coming up and she said, "There's my bad news." So when he walked in he walked up to her and she got up--there B&R HERITAGE ENTERPRISES for Gaelic Services and Products including Bho Thir Nan Craobh by Mary Jane Lamond (CD & CASSETTE) Tir Mo Ghraidh • a selection of Nova Scotia Gaelic music, story & song (CD & CASSETTE) Gaelic to Go • a 20-minute Gaelic pronunciation guide (CASSETTE ONLY)! "Oh," she said, "you've come to bring me bad news." She says, "It's my son." He says, "Yes." He said, "He died last night, he was killed coming down a flight of stairs." Now, imagine! When you see things like that you kind of wonder, you know. My wife is the same thing. Her brother was killed in Holland two days after the war was over. He was crossing the dike in Hol? land and he stepped on one of those anti? personnel mines.... And two days after-- she was working in (a factory) in Montreal during the war at the time. There was a bird that came at the window in the morn? ing and stayed there all day. That night she got the news that he had been badly wounded, next day she got news that he had died. So you often wonder, you know, when it happens to you. But there's one thing now--and this has been bothering me--and this was very early in 1939, just before the war broke out. I was coming from Poulamon four miles away and, as I got half way through, all of a sudden the whole sky lit up. Red from one end to the other, and right in the centre of the sky was one of the most beautiful crosses you ever saw--and three months af? ter, the war broke out in 1939. And I wonder somewheres around somebody must have seen the same thing I saw. Because I saw it and I know it happened. Whether it was some kind of a warning or what it was, I don't know. But it started from the edges and it kept getting red--and right in the centre was this beauti? ful yellow cross, big gold one. Approximate? ly, from what you could see (of) it from where I was, approximately four feet long.
