And last time I was in Cheticamp--the house was standing out on Cheticamp Island. We settled with him after I got the farmer and the architect in. Smiling Angus MacLeod (was the farmer) from South Bar (in Cape Breton County), an old Highlander, Gaelic- speaking. I wasn't there. Smith MacIver, the lawyer, was there and he was with Smiling Angus and they decided to go and call on this fellow. And Smith wouldn't go near the house, the man had been cross at him. Well, Smiling Angus said he'd call on him. So he went and knocked at the door and a man came, opened a crack, "Who in the hell are you?" "Oh, I am a farmer like your? self." The fellow opened the door, "Come on in, I thought you were another damn lawyer like MacIver." So they got along fine there. They went to three houses that day. There was one house they went to and the lawyer and the farmer asked to see the cellar. The architect (M. R. Chappell) wanted to see the foundation and so on. The architect went down, the man and his wife followed him down. The architect said, "This is a well built house. You don't see many houses this well built now-a-days." And he admired the foundation and the floor joists. Oh, it was a beautiful house. There was jam and pickles in the shelf and the farmer went over and got a bottle of jam. And that was beautiful jam and beautiful pickles--he wished his wife could make jam and pickles as good as that. The farmer's wife was all smiles. Look, they went away, everything was lovely. Then they went and called in (at another) house. He was grumpy sitting out on his front door step, and he had a Jersey cow tethered in the front yard. So the farmer immediately started admiring the cow, so LeBlanc got up and came over and they went over beside the cow. It was a nice Jersey IORMAWAY INN""N's SINCE 192&K: The first choice for fine food and lodging on the Cabot Trail The Normaway is proud to be able to share a part of Cape Breton's culture.
