great. When you look back you can say, oh, you knew all this was going to happen. But we didn't really. Didn't really. The scientists used to tell us--I can remember reading--the top men saying don't worry about the codfish. They lay X-millions of eggs each, per year, per season or whenever they lay them. And they'll never be a problem. He was wrong. But this was the philosophy in the Department of Fisheries. That's about 20 years ago. But they didn't know what the hell they were talking about. Here we are today. And the only way they're going to straighten it out is they have to take some real firm action. They're doing very well, actually. But they're going to have to even be firmer, I think. (By that time you were part of a--as you said--even way back, you were a very tiny Acadia University Distance Education
