on the small trees that are in front of me so that when it gets windy, the wind will turn the pages. That way I can read the prayers one more time before I die." He did this. When he started to leave towards home, she said to her brother, "On your way home, you will get a splinter in your left foot that will not heal until I get my two arms back so that I can take the splinter out." When she finally got imitated from the tree, she remembered hearing that if you get lost in the woods, you should find a river and follow it downwards. She followed the river down, down, down, and suddenly she found herself in a village • but she had her two arms cut off. She went to a hotel and asked the hotel manager for a room. The hotel manager said, "Yes, you can stay here. I pity you, with both arms cut off." She couldn't work, not even dress herself. The hotel manager said, "I have enough servants, they can help you dress." One day an officer arrived, and the hotel manager said to him, "Now, I have the most beautiful girl here in the Take Route 22 Out of Sydney to ...

The officer said, "I'd be curious to see her," As it turned out, the officer was the King's son. He went to see the girl, found her so beautiful that he asked her hand in marriage. She replied, "What's the use? I have both my arms cut off. I can't even make my bed or cook." "That makes no difference. If you want to marry me, I have plenty of money and can hire servants to do your work." "Well," she said, "if you want to marry me like this, I'll marry you." She married him. But the bo/s mother • the wife of the King • did not want the marriage. "You're marrying a girl you don't even know. Maybe she's a tramp or something." "It makes no difference not for you." Good enough. He mar? ried her. When they had been married about a year (with his mother living in her house and her son in the other), the King's son had to return to war. After his depar? ture, his wife had two baby boys. Two beau? tifiil boys. The mother wrote a letter to her son who was at war and announced that his wife had delivered two black babies.
