When returning from those islands, the ship he was on was pursued by pirates, and except for his might and pow? er, it would have been seized, and every? one on board would have been killed. After that he was in New Orleans, where a wager was made that he could not lift a ship's anchor weighing a ton. He lifted the anchor easily on his shoulders, but when he was letting it down, it hooked on his shoulder and he was never the same after that. Many are of the opinion that this had something to do with causing his death. He went to Spain, where he saw bull fights and many other things that he had never seen before, and which did not appeal to him. Although Spain was the country where he made the most money, he became tired of it and of its customs and was longing to go home. When he arrived home he was in poor health. He started trading and fish? ing salmon, and he prospered well. He bought farms for each of his brothers and he left them all well off. In eve? ry move he made he proved that he was kind and hon? ourable, and he was a man of good conduct all his life. He was only 28 years of age when he died.
