But one telltale they used to make: when I'd see a little smoke coming up out of the woods, I knew they were hiding there. So I'd blow the horn, then I wouldn't go any farther. Next thing you see them all coming out of the woods. Take the freight then on the horses, and haul it back. (And who was supplying the sleighs?) Oh, that's the people that (That were working for the mer? chant .) Oh, yes. I'll tell you, I had an experience down in Lords Cove. We didn't call at Lords Cove at the time. About four times a year when the merchant there'd get a big stock, you know. No wharf there, and it's open to the ocean. So this trip, we went in there and we had a lot of freight. Dorries, skiffs, everything, came off with the freight. And one article was puncheon of molasses. Now, there's no wharf or anything in there. Ninety-three gallons of molasses, heavy oak staves--I think it weighed over a ton.
