Four officers died. or longer, to beat out the whale. And after you get him beat out, you'd pump him in alongside. Then you had to get and cut a hole and put the hose in him and fill him with air. And then they'd put a flag on him and go off and look for another. We had as high as three coming in in tow one time. We brought them into the factory in Rosiru. They'd skin them. Used the bone, they used everything. That's 1928. (Surely someone took photographs of those days.) No. I didn't have any. I had a photo of it but I left it home, I never brought it. There was seven or eight of us. In the whale's mouth. At the factory. When we pulled him up on slip his mouth was open. We got in, had our picture taken. (Rosiru) was just a whale factory. Nobody lived there. Just a crowd that worked at the factory. (Did you think of yourself as a whaler?) No. You know, I liked it while I was at it. But I got a job on the coastal boats that fall, then I left. 'Cause it was only in the summertime you'd do the whaling. (This was in 1927, Your Ideas ...
