j limped, you know, and missed it. They picked up the life raft over round Low Point. She had three rings on her, like a canopy over it. That was all gone off it. So then the big sea came up and splashed everything on the side of her. That's the sea that drove our boat away from her. And we were watching and (the PatricA: Morris would) come over like that till her smoke? stack touched the water, and then she flipped right back. Her head went right straight in the air • you always see those movies like in the war • and she started to settle. Last time I looked at her I just watched her name. Her name was going under. I say thirty-five minutes, it was all over. She was gone. She made an awful noise. Well, I joean she had a lot of boxcars in her, you know. We only had about fourteen, I but holy cow, she had • I think there was four sets of tracks. That's the whole length of the ship now. But we never had a full load, you know. I suppose everything got loose. And we were in the (life)boat. I don't know how long we were in the boat, but it didn't seem that long. The first ship that came up to us was a dragger, but he couldn't do anything for us. He was just like a sub? marine underwater. He couldn't do any? thing. He might have killed us all. 'Cause you know those draggers are all fitted out with wires and booms. So he decided that he couldn't do anything. His windows were all smashed out of his ship and everything, so he left. So the Am? brose Shea was in here (in North Sydney). So she got the Mayday to come out, you know, that the Patrick Morris was going down. So she came out. Oh, my God. She used to go over far enough that you could look into the stern door of her and see the cars on the car deck. For all the years that I've been sailing, I never ever saw a sea-- the sea was sav? age . Mountains. And then we real? ized, you know, after the Ambrose Shea couldn't do anything. But I mean, everybody kept up their spirits. There was no panic. That was one good thing. Everybody knew their job. 'Cause if we didn't, well, there would be none of us around today. They were a great bunch of men. But then this big ship, this big German on the Bras d'Or Lakes!
