after that. A ship was wrecked at Black Point in very early days. Some of the crew got ashore. They said the captain was washed overboard and drowned. But when they were on shore they could hear him still on board and giving orders. Fishermen who later stayed there used to hear ghosts. Sometimes it was like sand blowing against the house although it was calm outside. They thought some persons could witch their cattle so they would not give much milk. Some believed it was unlucky to give away eggs for hatching. And black cats and rabbits were bad luck if they crossed the road ahead of you when you were going on a trip. I don't know what was supposed to happen if they did not make it. And it was un? lucky to lend on the first of May. And they believed in the Evil Eye. If a per? son praised anything very much you were supposed to say, "Wet your eye." Usually you were to put spit on it. And there was also a belief about the fairy stone. If you were out in the evening and something hit you, it was supposed to be the fairies that threw a small stone at you. If you found it and carried it with you, it was believed you would never be drowned. Grand River School Picture around 1890 ? Murchison (visitors), D.K.
